From the Most Rev. Michael W. Fisher
Bishop of Buffalo

On Sunday, October 18th we celebrate World Mission Sunday.

The second collection taken up on World Mission Sunday helps extend the Church's missionary work to places where the Church barely exists, where the Gospel has never been heard before, and where the church is too young, too persecuted, or too poor to sustain herself in Asia, Africa, Latin America, Oceania, and the Middle East.

From today's Gospel Reading:
Matthew 20:15-16

Am I not allowed to do what I choose with what belongs to me? Or are you jealous because I am generous?

Everyone feels jealousy of someone at some point, whether over someone's looks, possessions, status, or advantage. When we feel jealous, we perceive that someone has something desirable that we don't. We fear that because of what someone else has, we don't measure up in some way. When viewed this way, it becomes easier to see that jealousy is about perception, and perception is something we can change with a little effort and mindfulness.

Ways to Overcome Jealousy:

1.) Trust in God's plan for you. When you're jealous of someone, you feel that that person's "wins" in life highlight your perceived "losses." You may grumble that a friend's spouse is more thoughtful, that a friend's kids are more successful, or that a neighbor's career is more impressive. By feeding jealous thoughts, you're averting your eyes from the God of hope. God promises that He has a plan for you, a plan to prosper you and give you a future (Jeremiah 29:11). Make a conscious effort to trust your eternal God over your temporary emotions.

2.) Pray and study Scripture for guidance. God wants to comfort you in your worries and guide you through your daily struggles. Like any caring parent, God wants to be the voice that tells you which path to take when You're at a crossroads (Isaiah 30:21). He can't help you if you don't share your problems with Him first.

3.) Count your blessings.

When you stew in resentment over someone else's blessings, you may be inadvertently shrugging off your own.

Rather than minimize the value of the many blessings God has already bestowed upon you, take a moment to count them. From your health to your job, your loved ones to the roof over your head, sit and really consider the ways in which you are more fortunate than others. Don't do this in a self-satisfactory way, but in a way that praises God for His goodness.

4.) Wish others well, especially the people you are jealous of.

We are made good because we're made in God's image, but we are flawed because of our free will to make human choices. The mouth speaks what the heart is full of (Luke 6:45). If you allow jealousy to fill your heart, your words and actions will soon reflect the low state of your heart, and you will find yourself making condescending remarks. The more you practice wishing others well, the easier it becomes to do so and the quicker you can get back to living your best life.

5.) Quell your jealousy by improving your life.

Study what triggers your jealousy and ask yourself what positive changes you can make to address the root cause of that jealousy.

For example, if you're jealous of someone's looks, you can use that feeling as a prompt to eat better and exercise more. That way, you are changing a negative feeling into improved health.

How Can I Overcome Jealousy? | Christianity.com

“A humble soul does not trust herself, but places all its confidence in God.”

St. Faustina
